

GIRL'S SUITOR FAILS IN ATTEMPT TO ABDUCT HER

HUNDREDS TURNED FROM DOORS OF THE COOKING SCHOOL, FINAL SESSION; TWENTY GRAND GIFTS AND 54 OTHERS

Two Women of 80 Withstand Crush to Hear Miss Burroughs
Lecture — Some Leap Fence to Gain Seats — Hall
Filled Long Before Time of Session

From miles 'round they came—in through the narrow opening they crowded—then with a rush pushed forward to every available seat. Some were content with packing boxes for seats—others stood or leaned upon the window sills—and additional hundreds returned home disappointed.

The Courier cooking school ended last night with a bang! The first would-be cook camped on the door-step of St. James's parish building at 5.15 and by six there were a dozen waiting. A half hour later the crowd waiting for the doors to open had reached great proportions, and when time for the session arrived countless women had been turned away.

Some leaped over the high iron fence. Two women of 80 or more withstood the crush like youngsters and enjoyed it. They were going to hear Miss Burroughs!

And as her reward for being the oldest woman present; Mrs. Helen H. Hick, Hulmeville, was presented with a bouquet of roses by Miss Grace Burroughs, the lecturer, in memory of the latter's mother.

Eager was the crowd to witness the work, and hear of the recipients of the grand gifts, and there were 20 of these—gifts that all were proud to take home. They will help in better home-making.

Then too, there were 54 other gifts for the evening, including the 25 market bags of products.

The success of the school is an undisputed fact. Women from all walks of life were eager to clasp the hand of Miss Burroughs and personally express their appreciation and pleasure of her lectures and demonstrations.

Her undisputed niche in the world of cookery was again made manifest last evening as the hundreds sat in rapt attention as the work of the kitchen went on. And all silently wished for the mock turtle (fashioned of two flank steaks filled with ground meat, with less made of four weiners, and a head of liver pudding with two coves for eyes).

Two other bouquets were presented last evening, one to the hostess, Mrs. Horace H. Burton, of Edgely, who introduced Miss Burroughs, and one to Mrs. Serrill D. Dettelson.

In hundreds of homes today are the many recipes used by Miss Burroughs and printed upon the cooking school programs being used. Dozens have asked for recipes for apples a la king, ginger gimp, fudge icing, jiffy cake, India tea high-ball, Iced India tea with carbonated beverage. These will be printed in Monday's issue of the Courier.

A SERMONETTE

By Rev. George F. Hess
Pastor, Bristol M. E. Church

A noted divine has said: "Surely one cannot see by the eye of faith unless his spiritual perceptions are sharpened. One must listen to God, if he ever hears the voice of the Eternal."

"It is difficult to overvalue public worship. It has its basic place in life. It was Jesus' custom to attend synagogue services every Sabbath. There is that in corporate worship in the house of God which is distinctly ennobling."

Churches would not be perpetuated if there were not such inherent worth in them. Why not go to church tomorrow?

PINCHOT REPLIES TO CRITICS OF HIS ADMINISTRATION

Says Business of State Has Increased Tremendously Lately

EXPLAINS OWN OFFICE

Shows Big Increase in Correspondence and Number of Interviews

SCRANTON, Nov. 14.—Governor Pinchot addressing the Pennsylvania League of Women Voters, here, last night, took issue with those who state that the cost of government has increased during administration.

The Governor spoke as follows: "Has the cost of government been rising outrageously in this Commonwealth, Are State appropriations skyrocketing? Is this administration spending money like a drunken sailor. What do the figures show?"

First, let us take my own office. I think that intimately and ought to be competent to talk about it.

When I was Governor before, in the whole of my four years the correspondence of the Governor's Office, filled forty-six file drawers. In the first seven months of my present administration, so many more letters came in and had to be handled that the letter files filled eighty-four drawers.

When I was Governor before, the correspondence took up a little less than one filing drawer a month. In the first seven months of my present term, the correspondence filled twelve drawers a month.

And this is not an over-statement, because the eighty-four drawers were actually filled in seven months but in the time from January 21 to August 6—or exactly six months and a half.

This was the increase in letters. The increase in visitors also was enormous. Fifty interviews a day is a very big day's work for any executive. I have had over 150 interviews in one day during my present term and that counts one delegation as one interview.

"The members of my office have been similarly overwhelmed, and there have been many other kinds of increases in work which I shall not stop to tell about."

It would seem to a man up a tree that such an increase would justify an increase in appropriation. Nevertheless, the appropriation for the Governor's Office is exactly the same as it was under Governor Fisher. The increase in office force is only a fraction of the increase in work, and it is mainly supplied by temporary loans from some of the Departments.

But if the Governor's Office is doing many times more work for the same money, what about the expenses of the Commonwealth in general?

During my first term, I paid off an inherited debt of $32,000,000 which, as a matter of fact, has turned out to be $35,000,000. In spite of that the expenditures for the operations of government have been reduced.

JAPAN GIVES ULTIMATUM

Reiterating Japan's refusal to evacuate Manchuria by November 16, as demanded by the League of Nations Council, Japanese military authorities delivered an ultimatum today to the Chinese General Ma Chan-Shan demanding his retirement from Taitsihar and cessation of Chinese army activities along the Toannan Railway by November 25th.

CROYDON BEACON LIGHT BEGINS ITS REVOLUTIONS

Beam Cast from Top of High
Tower on Wilkinson
Property

FROM SUNSET TO DAWN

CROYDON, Nov. 14.—Croydon is now on the aviation map.

The first beam of light was cast last evening shortly before five o'clock from the beacon which will assist in guiding aviators as they traverse their route far above the terrain.

The light revolves four times each minute, and can be seen for some distance.

The long, slender shaft of illumination attracted much attention last evening, and many who did not know just when the light was to be turned on, wondered for a time about the steady flashing.

The tower, 95 feet high, was completed last August, the work being carried out in record time. The tower, which is of steel, is located on the farm of Arthur Wilkinson, between the Pennsylvania Railroad and State Road. The plot of ground has been rented by the United States government from Mr. Wilkinson.

Beside the large revolving light of high candle-power, there are two small stationary lights.

The steel tower, atop which the lights are located, was completed in record time of a few days during the summer.

Months

NOW HELD UNDER BAIL

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Nov. 14.—A Philadelphia youth, venue Kingman, 16, 5136 Torresdale avenue, Philadelphia, was struck and seriously injured at Station avenue and Bristol Pike, by an automobile at 8:20 last night. Kingman had just stepped from a car of the Trenton, Bristol & Philadelphia Railway Company.

The car was driven by Paul Sacca, 29, Bristol Park Annex, No. 2, Croydon. Sacca was taken into custody at the Harriman Hospital by County Detective Russo and held in $300 bail to await the outcome of Kingman's injuries.

Kingman suffered a fracture of the right leg, contused laceration of the back of the head and was severely shocked.

The injured man was taken to the Harriman Hospital, Bristol, by John Paul, Distillery Lane, Eddington.

Sacca told Detective Russo that Kingman stepped off the car into the path of his automobile.

Sacca is married and has one child. He was returning from his first day's employment in two months at the Budd plant in Philadelphia. He wanted to take the injured man to the hospital but bystanders volunteered and Sacca followed. He was driving a small delivery truck.

Accomplice of Man Engaged Girl's Brother in Fistic Combat While Sister Was Being Dragged About Roadway in An Attempt to Force Her Into Car --- Police Send Descriptions Broadcast to Other Cities

Prevented from marrying the girl of his choice because of the objections of his sweetheart's father, a Bristol youth aided by a friend attempted to kidnap the girl, early last evening, at Lafayette and Canal streets, here.

The girl, Anna Lentini, 18, 810 Jefferson avenue, was almost stripped of her clothing, beaten on the head and her brother, Henry, 17, was attacked by an accomplice.

Police sent descriptions broadcast over the teletype for the arrest of Angelo Napoli, 24, 1927 Elm street. Napoli weighs 140 pounds, black curly hair; Anthony Destafano, 24, 180 pounds and dark complexioned. Warrants have been sworn out for the arrest of both, charging them with holding up at the point of a gun, and attempted kidnapping.

According to Miss Lentini, an attractive girl with dark brown hair and brown eyes, Napoli after a two-year courtship wanted to marry her about six months ago. The girl consulted her father, Lawrence Lentini, who advised the pair to wait awhile as "times are hard," he said.

Napoli objected to the delay and finally the courtship was broken off about three weeks ago. Since that time Napoli has attempted to meet her upon frequent occasions.

GREAT SMOKIES ARE LURE TO MOTORISTS

Delightful Mountain Region
Between Tennessee and North Carolina

DISTANCE IS 1645 MILES

Straddling the borderline between Tennessee and North Carolina stand the Great Smoky Mountains, one of the most alluring scenic areas in the United States.

The Keystone Automobile Club has mapped an attractive motor tour to this delightful mountain region that can be covered in approximately 1645 miles.

"Down the beautiful Shenandoah Valley the tour leads through highly scenic and historic territory to this alluring 'Land of the Skies' which is one of America's most noted vacation havens," says Russell B. Carty, representative of the club.

From Bristol the tour leads over the Boulevard, then Hunting Park avenue and City Line Avenue to Overbrook. Here a right turn into the Lincoln Highway carries the tourists through Lancaster to Gettysburg where a left turn into the state highway leads through Zora and Waynesboro to Hagerstown, Md. From this point U. S. Route 11 is followed through Martinsburg to Winchester, Va.

Southward over U. S. Route 11 through the rugged and picturesque Shenandoah Valley the tour leads past caverns and grotto lands at Strasburg, New Market and Harrisonburg to historic Staunton, birthplace of President Woodrow Wilson. Tablets, monuments and other markers that line the way tell of numerous historic episodes that occurred in this old valley from the days of Indians and white settlers, down through the years of the Revolution and the Civil War. At Lexington, the seat of Washington and Lee University, are buried General Robert E. Lee and his famous commander, "Stonewall" Jackson.

Fourteen miles south of this city stands Natural Bridge, one of the outstanding natural wonders of the world. Southward through Roanoke, Wytheville and Abingdon, all towns rich in historic interest and scenic beauty, the tour leads across the Tennessee boundary to Bristol. From this quaint old town, two routes are offered to the Great Smoky Mountain area, one leads through Bluff City where U. S. Route 19 is met and followed through Elizabethton, Cranberry and Grantville to Asheville, a noted and delightful vacation resort center of the southland. For more than fifty miles U. S. Route 19 winds along the eastern side of the rugged mountain range among beautiful scenic portions of North Carolina.

The other route, winding along the western side of the giant mountain range, leads down the beautiful valley of Tennessee, over U. S. Route 11 E, through Johnson City to Greenville. Here can be seen the little frame tailor shop in which President Andrew Johnson worked in his youth. The site of the historic Watauga Settlement, the old Daniel Boone Trail, and scores of landmarks connected with Revolutionary War and Civil War days are passed along this highway. Morristown and Knoxville are (Continued on Page 4)

Last evening at about 5:45 Miss Lentini, her sister, Catherine, 21; brother, Henry, 17; along with John Maricel, 17, and his sister, Mary, 20, 328 Franklin street, were returning home from their employment at the Blue Moor hosiery plant in the car of Maricel. As they approached the intersection of Lafayette and Canal streets, another car drove in front of them and crowded them to the sidewalk, forcing them to stop.

Two men, later identified as Napoli and Angelo Destafano, leaped from the car, blocking the roadway, and ran toward the Maricel machine.

According to the story given to Chief Jones and County Detective Anthony Russo, by Miss Lentini and her companions, Destafano approached to the right side with a handkerchief tied over his face in the form of a mask. He attacked Henry Lentini, Anna's brother, while Napoli, who flashed a pistol, went to the left side of the car and grabbed the girl from the rear seat, dragged her out onto the roadway and the pair shuffled around in the road, Napoli attempting to force Anna into the machine while she tried to break loose from his grip. Her clothing was torn to shreds and the sleeves pulled from her coat. She grabbed the spare tire on the back of Napoli's car and this delayed her capture long enough to prevent its successful consummation.

By this time John Maricel, his sister and Anna's sister all became involved in the struggle and the girls were thrown to the ground. Catherine Lentini suffered bruises about the knees and her sister Anna was hit over the head by Napoli with his fist.

Frank Kirk, Croydon, sat on the steps of Grundy's mill, a short distance away, and attracted by the cries for help, started along Canal street and was sighted by Napoli and Destafano and they both jumped into their car and made their getaway. Police were notified and quickly made a check-up of the haunts of the pair and then sent out guards.

Roadways were flanked, bridge guards notified and an officer was stationed all night at the boarding house of Napoli.

Miss Lentini was disgusted with the whole affair and says that she no longer cares for Napoli, and remarked: "If I had loved him I would have married him."

Miss Lentini was dressed in a bright red dress, last night, with a white yoke and wore a light tan colored coat. Her garments were torn from the neck down to the sleeves ripped from her coat. She gave stiff battle to her would-be abductor and fought him off with all her might.

A GREAT FIELD FOR CHURCHES

That new force which the church must reckon with in considering religious movements since popularization of the radio is styled by one of the broadcasting ministers as the "mighty shirtless congregation." The name is descriptive of the millions who every Sunday listen in to church services broadcast from hundreds of churches.

If the radio explains a declining church attendance, it also explains why more people are receiving religious instruction today than ever before. Many, who have no local church ties, prefer to hear the service of a large church by radio to the service of the small community church from the pew. For thousands of housewives the radio has solved the problem of getting Sunday dinner without missing the morning services. And, no doubt, there are countless men and women with that peculiar mental twist which permits them to enjoy a service brought to them by the wireless miracle but keeps them out of the church. Moreover, there are millions who feel they cannot dress to meet church-going requirements or rejoice in the opportunity of taking their religion in shirtsleeves, armchair, slippers and a halo of cigar smoke.

Although these long-distance church-goers are neither voting nor paying members, the churches are compelled to take this vast unseen congregation into account.

The needs of the absent worshippers are to be supplied if the church is to serve to the maximum of its opportunities. The needs of these listeners may be somewhat different from those of the staid, regular, trained-in-the-faith parishioners, but the obligation and the responsibility of the church toward them is not less. Here is a new field, another opportunity, for the church.

WEATHER AND SUCH

Weather prediction, aside from the subtle scientific calculations formulated by the official forecasters, is usually held to be an avocation of, let us say, amateur connoisseurs. It isn't strange that this should be so.

There were times when a great many people gravely prepared for a cool summer or a warm winter on the word of gossamer prophets, who sometimes predicted snow for July or sunstrokes in January. Gossamer, as we learned in the course of time and bitter experience, are useless for long-distance weather prognostication. It may be that these are jokers at heart. Rheumatic twinges sometimes may be depended on to foretell changes of atmospheric pressure likely to occur within twenty-four hours. But it is so much to suppose that an aching knee may positively indicate the direction of big winds in Saskatchewan in a season yet six months off.

Nowadays people are content to rely on the scientific gadgets and formulae used in the weather bureau. The gossamer man has been put in a niche close to that occupied by the prophets who rise every now and then to predict the sudden end of the world.

Frank Severn has been kidnapped from his country home, Beggar's Court, apparently by persons trying to steal the fabulous and sinister Czarina Rubies. Severn's friend, Jim Wynter, enlists the help of Bill Grayson, a lawyer, and they search the grounds, discovering a secret stairway and a locked door in the ruins of an ancient chapel. While they plan to force the door a wall collapses, burying it under tons of masonry. They suspect Martin, a servant of Severn's, of dynamiting the wall. They begin to doubt also the sincerity of Sant, Severn's attorney.

In a village nearby they meet an ex-convict, Ilsham, who goes on crutches. Also they encounter a mysterious Dr. Martell, whose presence Martin, the servant, tries for some reason to conceal.

Grayson's wife and Katharine Faring to whom the rubies rightfully belong by inheritance from her Russian grandfather, return to London while the two men plan to search Beggar's Court again at night. Wynter discovers Ilsham, his crutches laid aside, examining a motor boat in a boathouse. Martin and a thug named Frome try to shoot Wynter, who outwits and captures them. In the library Wynter finds an incriminating letter addressed to himself, which some one has opened and hidden away. It warns him that Sant is untrustworthy. He returns it to its hiding place. He and Grayson return to Westminster.

CHAPTER XLII

Milly was yawning prodigiously. "Here you are at last—I thought you were never coming," she cried. "Like an angel Katharine's been keeping me company. I made her promise to stay the night here, instead of going back to her flat and leaving me to a dull evening all by myself. Well, what exciting news have you brought back, Bill?"

"None at all, I'm afraid," Bill said in his most casual tone. "We saw Sant, but—no, nothing of interest to tell you, Milly. My hat, it's good to be back after a long, tiring day."

"No news, Bill—after Katharine and I have been waiting prepared to be thrilled?" cried Milly reproachfully.

"Sorry to be such a disappointing husband, old thing," Bill said lightly. "But all Jim and I want to do now is to put on our oldest and most comfortable slippers and forget for the time that there is an infernally worrying mystery at Beggar's Court."

A SECRET

They were not going to speak of tonight's attempt on Jim's life—which would only have needlessly alarmed Milly and Katharine. And Bill, knowing how difficult Milly found it to keep a secret, had decided, too, that as yet she must not be told that Sant was a proved traitor.

At Manorways they would necessarily see something of Sant. The latter might already have some inkling of their suspicion of him; but a pretense of good terms must be kept up for the present at least—a pretense that would have been difficult for blunty outspoken Milly.

Jim dropped into a deep easy chair by the fire with a little sigh of content after the long strain of the past four hours and tried to banish for the time from his mind that anxious problem of Frank Severn.

The long low room was lighted only by one shaded lamp and the glow of the wood fire on the hearth, that left the remotest spaces half in shadow. The reflection of the dancing flames touched Katharine's face, throwing up to Jim's eyes its allurements and loveliness... a different Katharine from that girl of a few nights ago with the haunting trouble in her eyes, when chance had brought her all unexpectedly into his life again.

Jim Wynter felt he could not be grateful enough for that gift of chance; for Katharine's sake, since she had needed a friend so desperately... for his own, because—well, because.

DISQUIETING

Just for a moment the intruding thought occurred in his mind of those two almost soundless shots in the dark of the grounds at Beggar's Court—of how but for a bare margin of inches he would not have been sitting here, watching the play of firelight that found wandering gleams of bronze in the dark glory of her hair, would never have seen her again. An ugly intruding memory. But impatiently he thrust it into the background of his mind again.

They were going down to Manorways tomorrow. Milly, always impulsive, had decided on that. She was all eagerness, like a child with a new toy.

"After all, why not tomorrow?" She flung the question challengingly at Bill's head, though it was always a foregone conclusion that Bill would let her have her own way. "A caretaker's been living there, so it's not as though the house needed airing or warming first. We'll send the two maids over early tomorrow to get everything ready and we'll go down in the evening. You can be ready by then, Katharine?"

"Oh, yes, I shall love to go tomorrow. And I think it's awfully good of you to have me."

Katharine could not quite keep that little tremor out of her voice. It was so wonderful, had touched her so deeply, all this kindness, these new friendships that had come to her when things had seemed so hopeless and desperate, when she had needed kindness and friends so much.

"Oh, rats," said Milly. "Jimmy shall drive you over to your flat after breakfast tomorrow for you to do your packing. Well, I've been suppressing yawns for the last hour after a week of late nights. Coming, Katharine?"

Jim could have wished that Milly's week of late hours had not robbed him of Katharine's society, too, as he said good-night to them in the hall.

From the foot of the stairs his eyes followed the slim, graceful figure as Katharine went up with Milly to her room. At the bend of the winding stairs she turned to fling a smiling backward glance at him before passing out of sight, and Jim went back to where Bill was sitting staring thoughtfully into the fire, with a pipe between his teeth that refused to keep quiet.

Bill looked up as he dropped into the chair opposite.

"This damned worrying problem we're up against, Jim—I told myself I wouldn't think of it any more tonight, but I can't help thinking of it," he said with a frown. "We know pretty certainly now that Sant, Martell, Martin and Frome are behind this plot against Severn—with Ilsham a doubtful quantity so far. But have we an atom of legal evidence that would warrant the police arresting any one of 'em?"

"What about Frome? I'll swear he's the man I saw—or rather didn't see—at Monksilver."

MYSTERY

"That's just it. You didn't see him. You only recognized him by his voice—darned poor evidence for a jury. And then, too, there's only your word for it that Creyke was murdered. The actual proof, the dead man himself—where?"

Bill Grayson paused and lit his pipe again.

"And suppose we could have Frome arrested. His arrest would only alarm the big fish, give 'em time to swim out of the net—and would probably seal Severn's fate. If his captors got panicky, they might feel that Severn was more dangerous alive than dead... men to whom murder comes merely as an item in the day's work. A damned worrying problem, Jim."

And that unsigned communication that Sant had suppressed had added a new puzzling factor to the case. Had that letter with Severn's signature, that had taken Jim Wynter down to Beggar's Court, been as their anonymous informant asserted a forgery?

"I admit it never crossed my mind that it wasn't from Frank," Jim said. "But if it's a forgery—"

"If a forgery, why then we've got to reconstruct all our ideas. If Severn was already in his enemies' power at the time that letter was sent to you, then this conspiracy against him may date back five weeks—when, as we know now Severn came over to England by air, to become suddenly as silent as a dead telephone wire. If it was then he fell victim to this treachery, it would explain why Severn never kept his promise of seeing Katharine."

Jim nodded thoughtfully at the fire.

"And that would mean that when Sant and I went to Beggar's Court that night, to find that S. O. S. on the mirror and no Frank there Sant must have saved all the time what we should find at our journey's end; that it had all been stage-managed for my benefit. But why?"

The thing was helplessly bewildering. "If Frank Severn was already their prisoner, what had Martell & Co. to gain by advertising this pretended kidnapping, when things were going all their own way, no suspicion aroused by Frank's supposed absence abroad? Instead of letting sleeping dogs lie, they seemingly go out of their way to stir Severn's friends and the police into bubbling activity. Where was the point of that? Seems so damn silly," Jim said irritably.

Bill Grayson gave a shrug. "Well, they're not exactly fools, you know. You've still got that letter, I suppose? We've got to try to find out whether it's a forgery or not."

"Katharine knows his handwriting. I'll get her opinion."

Jim Wynter paused. Then suddenly: "Suppose that Frank fell into those treacherous hands five weeks back—what could have been their object? Those jewels hidden at Monksilver? But could Sant and the others have even known of them then?"

No hint of the Murinov jewels had come out at the time of Federoff's murder. In his letter from abroad, which had brought Katharine her first intimation that the Czarina Rubies were now in a safe hiding place at Monksilver known only to himself, Severn had warned her that so dangerous a secret must not be breathed to anyone else.

"Which pretty certainly looks as if he had kept even Sant in the dark—and as though when they planned this conspiracy against Severn they hadn't even an inkling about those rubies. Jim, what if there was something bigger, more urgent even than these jewels behind this conspiracy? Bill cried, his voice rapid and eager; "something else altogether that as yet we don't even remotely guess, but that's the key to the whole mystery?"

IDEA

"And that it was only later they happened to get wind of those hidden rubies?" Jim's voice was suddenly excited, too. "My hat, I believe you've got it, Bill—and that I can make a good guess how they stumbled on that secret! Katharine's letter, of course."

"But what letter's that?"

TRICKS of MAGIC EXPLAINED by Will L. Lindhorst

HOW TO HANG HAT ON WALL WITHOUT NAIL OR HOOK

Take a wood pencil, octagonal shape, and rub it up and down against a painted wood surface, pressing hard at the same time. The heat caused by the friction will make the pencil stick and it will be possible to hang a lightweight hat on the pencil's point. As the pencil may leave marks on the paint, it is best to do this trick on an old surface.

CARDINAL AND GRAY
DOWNS SPRINGFIELD

(By Leon Schiffer)

Reeling off 30 yards on an off-tackle thrust, Raymond Pico, captain of the Cardinal and Gray eleven, in one of the most sensational tilts of the year, broke through Springfield High's defense yesterday afternoon to score the deciding touchdown of the game, which proved to be an 18 to 12 setback for the invaders. Incidentally, this victory makes the second consecutive win for the Bristol eleven after a three weeks' losing streak.

Although many sensational runs were torn off by the besieged backs, teamwork was the keynote of their offensive attack. The Cardinal and Gray minions had at last proven that they had finally found themselves. Cooperating and working in unison, Ken Townsend's proteges had the invaders baffled by their smoothness and preciseness in working intricate plays.

The invaders tasted "first blood" early in the opening canto. Receiving possession of the ball on Bristol's 30 yard line when Miller recovered a blocked kick, the Blue and White quickly swung into their offensive formation. Metzel on an off-tackle thrust broke loose and with a clear field stretching before him sped over 30 yards of terra firma for Springfield's initial tally of the game. The try for the extra point failed.

However, in the second quarter the Cardinal and Gray eleven, determined to secure the lead at all costs, retaliated. Gaining possession of the oval on Springfield's 45 yard mark, Coach Townsend's proteges quickly massed into their offensive formation. Starting their smashing attack with a line buck by Bornice, the pigskin was advanced to the invaders' 20 yard line. Following two line plunges with no gain in yardage, Cole on a reverse tore off 10 yards, advancing the oval to Springfield's 15 yard line. Placed in a scoring position and with their hearts already set upon a six-pointer, the Cardinal and Gray boys were not to be stopped in their furious offensive onslaught. Breaking loose, Bornice on an end run sped over 15 yards of Blue and White territory for Bristol's first touchdown of the game. The try for the extra point failed.

With the score on ice and with another half to play still looming on the horizon, the dyed-in-wool Cardinal and Gray rooters entertained hopes of seeing the tie broken by their boys. Refreshed and determined to score if at all possible, the rabid fans saw two inspired eleveners battle furiously up and down the field during the third period in a desperate attempt to score.

However, all scoring had been reserved for the fourth stanza. The canto opened with Bristol receiving possession of the ball on their own 25-yard mark. Gaffney on a triple pass straight-armed two would-be tacklers, ended another and broke into the open. Running with all the craftiness, cunning and shiftness of a brilliant and natural open field runner, the Cardinal and Gray stellar backfield man sped over 45 yards of alien territory before being downed on Springfield's 30 yard line by Metzel, the invaders' safety man. Inspired and bubbling over with eagerness, the Cardinal and Gray minions were not to be restrained. Starting a smashing attack, Coach Townsend's proteges quickly advanced the pigskin to the invaders' 3 foot mark. Following two attempts to score, Gaffney crashed through center for the Cardinal and Gray's second consecutive touchdown of the game. The Bristol lads again failed to convert the extra point.

However, the besieged had not seen the last of "Springfield scoring." Taking advantage of the breaks, the invaders showed how an invincible and undefeated eleven should use them to advantage. Gaining possession of the ball on their own 45 yard line, the Blue and White started their long march down the field which terminated only after Ken Townsend's minions had courageously weathered for two downs the invaders' furious offensive onslaught. On the following play, Webster on a center plunge eluded the outstretched hands of the Bristol eleven and broke into the open. With the plodding of feet behind him to ever warn him of the angry horde, the Blue and White diadem star sped over 30 yards of Cardinal and Gray territory for Springfield's second six-pointer and the tying tally of the game. Metzel failed to place kick the extra point.

With only a few seconds to play all indication pointed to a tie between the two eleveners. However, the Cardinal and Gray minions had not yet given up hope. Recovering a fumble by Webster on Springfield's 30-yard line, Cole regained possession of the oval for the besieged. With the field clothed in darkness and dust, Pico, taking advantage of the opportunity to use the darkness as his shield, broke loose on an off-tackle thrust and plodded over 30 yards of Springfield territory for the Cardinal and Gray's third tally and deciding touchdown of the game.

Next week the Bristol eleven plays the Alumni.

VALUE OF VITAMINS
STRESSED FOR TEETH

Right Kind of Food Will Save The Teeth, It Is Said

DENTAL DISEASES

E. V. McCOLLUM, Ph. D., Sc.D.

School of Hygiene and Public Health.

That the right food will save teeth is the latest contribution of science to the family budgeting. Even before the birth of a child, the mother can take measures to assure him a good sound set of teeth in years to come by seeing that her own diet is properly balanced. Since the mother will sacrifice her own tissues, including the teeth, during the prenatal life of her infant unless her diet provides everything necessary for bone and tooth development, she protects herself even more than her baby by taking at this time the proper amount of vitamin D. That in time all children will have perfectly healthy teeth and gums is not too much to predict on the basis of the scientific research which is constantly going on.

Experiments have shown conclusively that there is a very close connection between the character of the diet and the structure and the health of the teeth and gums. These findings point the way not only to a great reduction in tooth decay and in gum diseases, but to the possibility of rearing children so as to safe-guard the development of their tooth structure and the practicability of following a regime throughout life which will minimize the prospects of cavities and pyorrhea in the adult.

Earlier belief as to the cause of tooth decay laid it to the action of bacteria in the mouth. Many dentists still hold to this view, but recent researches have shed a new light on the problem. One of the most recent findings is that undernutrition, particularly as regards a lack of vitamin C and vitamin D, is the principal cause. The healing of pyorrhea in sixty days by good surgery plus feeding patients large quantities of orange and lemon juice, in both of which there is a considerable amount of vitamin C, have been reported, and dental decay appears also to be arrested by this treatment. The juice of tomato, cabbage or other succulent vegetable or the liberal consumption of any one of several fruits rich in vitamin C would exert the same effect.

A test to confirm this principle is now underway in a large children's orphanage at Mooseheart, Illinois. The children there eat an abundance of good nourishing food supplied according to the directions of a trained dietitian, but lacking somewhat in vitamin C. At the beginning of the test the children had all cavities in their teeth filled, and color-photographs of their teeth and gums were taken. Over a period of a year the children were kept on their regular diet. Then, at the beginning of the second year a generous amount of vitamin C was added to the daily food intake. The test is still incomplete, but all those on this diet show a definite improvement in their general health.

The importance of vitamin D for sound tooth construction has been established by innumerable biologic tests. Professor Edward Mellanby, writing in the Journal of the American Medical Association in January of this year, states: "It is evident that the initiation and spread of caries (dental decay) can be largely influenced by diets... that this effect in inhibiting the carious process is dependent largely on vitamin D alone."

On the basis alone of effects associated with dental caries, such as toothache, abscesses, or time required for receiving dental attention, the problem is an important one. Considered in the light of major handicaps that can, and do, result from dental diseases—rheumatism (often called growing pains), heart disease, and maldevelopment, the problem is distinctly a serious one, especially for children of the pre-school age.

All adult dental diseases except pyorrhea are the result of poor tooth development or neglect of the proper diet and hygiene during childhood (according to one authority). The development of sound teeth, capable of resisting destructive agencies, is essentially a dietary problem. The small jaws and crowding of the teeth so frequently seen in children is almost certainly the result of faulty skeletal development, and will be intensified by dietary errors, notably an inadequate supply of vitamin D, which favor the development of rickets.

Vitamin D is almost absent from the foods we include in our three meals a day. Ordinary white bread can now be supplied by a new process with this hitherto scarce vitamin; it is the only table food which supplies the amount needed by the average person. The amount of vitamin D in other foods in which a trace is found varies under different conditions. Of all ordinary foods, eggs come the nearest and whole milk also contains a very slight amount. The most concentrated sources, apart from sunshine, the great natural source, are cod-liver oil and other fish oils.

ernment for my first biennium were $5,840,000 less than for the last biennium of Governor Sproul. In these two years the State Government was run at a reduction of about forty million dollars. Is there any similar case in the history of any other State?

The last biennium of my first term showed expenditures of $237,500,000 including a $30,000,000 increase for highways, $8,000,000 more for schools, and $6,000,000 more for hospitals and other welfare work. The total increase during the first Pinchot administration, in round numbers was $48,000,000, $44,000,000 of which was for the items just mentioned.

The total increase during the Fisher administration was $113,937,000.

The appropriations for the first biennium of my present term instead of showing an increase over the last biennium of Governor Fisher, showed a decrease of $4,000,000.

But if the charge of extravagance falls down in total sums expended, what about jobs?

In 1914, when payments from the Treasury amounted to about $30,000,000 for that year, there were on the payroll about 2000 employees. In 1930, when the Treasury payments for the year were about $165,000,000, five and a half times as much, the number of employees on the payroll had increased about five times. But as the value of the dollar went down, the cost of service went up, and the payroll of $2,000,000 in 1914 had increased in 1930 to $17,000,000 excluding employees of the Welfare and Public Instruction Institutions, or more than eight times as much. That was the payroll when I came into office last January.

What about the large number of high-salaried drones alleged to have been added to that payroll by the present administration?

Listen to the dreadful facts. Excluding schools and hospitals, in the eight and a half months from the time I came in to October first, 247 people had been added to the payroll. This was only two and four-tenths per cent of the more than 10,000 employees that were turned over to me by the Fisher administration.

Of the 247 people, 178 were added in the Department of Revenue to help collect gasoline and other delinquent taxes. They did. They collected in September of this year $1,500,000 more in gasoline tax alone than was collected in September a year ago.

These men paid for themselves over and over again. As back taxes are collected their number is being rapidly reduced.

Of the remaining 69, 19 were added by the Treasury Department and 20 by the Auditor General's Department. There has been for all of the executive departments, outside of the Revenue Department, a net increase to the payroll since I took office of 30 persons, certainly a small addition to the 10,000 who were already there.

These figures effectively disprove the allegation that the Pinchot administration has appointed swarms of high-salaried drones.

I am not sure that I ought not to apologize for the small net increase in employees under the Pinchot administration at this time when unemployment is the central problem of the Commonwealth and so many thousands of people need work. We are planning to give them work—on the highways, in the forests, and elsewhere, as well as to take care of the increasing burden upon the State owned and State aided hospitals caused by the depression.

My attention has been called to a statement by a Mr. Collins, Democratic State Chairman, to the effect that the way to take care of the unemployed is to reduce the salaries of State employees ten per cent and devote the money to unemployment relief.

Apart from the fact that, under the Constitution of Pennsylvania, which seems to have little weight with Mr. Collins, providing work, it is perhaps worth pointing out that the total payroll of State employees is $25,864,000, of which about $8,000,000 a year in round numbers goes to employees at the Welfare and Public Instruction Institutions and even if we take ten per cent of the whole amount that is only $2,586,400.

This seems to be Mr. Collins' idea of what the State of Pennsylvania ought to devote to the relief of the unemployed. If his statement has no other value, it serves to prove conclusively that Mr. Collins does not know what he is talking about.
